Open Letter to Libraries across Canada

Dear Librarian:

Thank you for serving the community by promoting books, authors and their readers. We rely on your expertise to let us know what is new, what is important, and what is available so we'd like to introduce you to The Claremont Review.

The Claremont Review is a bi-annual literary magazine that publishes the best short fiction, drama, poetry and art produced by the world's youth: 13 to 19 years of age. Founded in 1991, by writers and English teachers in Victoria, BC, The Claremont Review is the voice of young people: an archive that preserves fresh, new talent, the signature of young people who often cannot find a venue for publication. Our authors hail mostly from Canada but we have published work from the US, Australia, Asia and Africa.

The editors and readers of The Claremont Review appreciate your help in bringing these stories and poems to all communities. If your library does not already subscribe, please return the form below and your subscription will start immediately.

The Claremont Review's website, www.theClaremontReview.ca, provides submission guidelines, writing tips, mentor programs, monthly and yearly contest information and links to other sites of interest to young writers. Your comments are appreciated.

The Claremont Review is a non-profit enterprise funded by The Canada Council, Publications Mail Registration, C.P.A., personal patrons and our many subscribers. It is distributed by the C.M.P.A. Thank you for your patronage, and for your strong, community commitment.

Sincerely,
The Claremont Review Publishers
